A troupe of dancers from Jharkhand adept in the Seraikella genre of Chhau on October 12. It is a semi-classical dance of eastern India with martial and folk traditions that enacts episodes from epics including the Mahabharata and Ramayana, local folklore, and abstract themes. The name may have been derived from Sanskrit, Chaya (shadow, image, or mask). Some link it to Chadma (disguise) and others suggest it's derived from Chhauni (military camp, armour, stealth) in Odia language. It is performed in three styles, one each from Jharkhand, West Bengal, and Odisha. Masks form an integral part of Chhau dance in Purulia and Seraikella styles. It is traditionally an all-males troupe and is mainly performed during festivals.
